For Such a Time As This Were You Born

For I have beckoned, and I have wooed, and I have called, and I have cried, and I have pleaded: Come unto Me, come unto Me, come unto Me that I may hold you and strengthen you and pour in that oil and that salve where the hurts have wounded and caused you to walk like that which you are not. For you are Mine, says the Lord. And I have given you My spirit, and I have empowered you with My Father's Spirit. Now I am calling you to have enough love to venture into the dangerous fields where [there are] those that hate you, those that despise Me and My Name, those that despise My Father.

I have called you, and I have called you to love them enough to risk everything like I did. The fields are white for the harvest, but I have few who carry My love enough to lay down their lives to venture forth into the harvest. But I have prepared you for this hour. I have prepared you for this very time—for such a time as this were you born.

Even in times of old, men and women would offer up worship in vain. They would offer up worship in the safety of their homes, especially where they could be seen of men. But in vain they did worship Me, holding for doctrine the commandments of men and not that of God. I have called you to the truth. I have called you to the truth for I am Truth. I bring you nothing but truth. Follow Me. Follow Me. Follow Me into what I have for you, and together with My Spirit, you will harvest this world for My Father's Kingdom, says the Lord.
